Engineer and entrepreneur · Sustainable biotechnology: silk-protein commercialisation, biogas and organic fertilisers

He lives at PFC with his wife and two children. An engineer by training, and a Bengaluru entrepreneur building ventures in sustainable biotechnology — silk-protein commercialisation, biogas and organic fertilisers. He puts his approach plainly: most problems are not complicated, they persist for want of time, of a willingness to hear people out, or of emotional maturity — and he works through them with six questions, why, what, where, when, who and how. For the past two years he has supported the Lakshya Foundation's health camps in Sarjapur and the villages around it, which provide free eye tests, glasses, medicines and general health screening to communities that would otherwise go without.
