Electrical engineer · Custom switchgear and control panels for industry, IT parks, warehouses, housing and solar plants

A PFC resident since 2020, and an electrical engineer by training. He runs his own business designing and manufacturing custom switchgear and control panels — the capital equipment behind industrial plants, IT parks, warehouses, residential and commercial complexes and solar installations across India, with supply to the Middle East, the Maldives and the wider Asia-Pacific. A working life spent specifying and delivering that equipment is what he offers here: what a piece of plant actually has to do, what a supplier is actually committing to, and whether what arrived matches what was ordered. On why he is standing he keeps it plain — that no society functions without shared responsibility and mutual obligation, and that collective effort is worth something when it is aimed at people getting along.
